Voices from the Himalayas: Sustainability, Governance Issues and Historical Memory

03 December 2025, Sikkim University

Concept Note

As the Indian state's administrative capacities expand and penetrate deeper into the lives of borderland communities, these processes have impinged upon the role of traditional community institutions, which have played a crucial role in governing these societies, causing new challenges and raising questions about the adaptability of traditional institutions for modern governance. Another challenge is that of sustainable development. With the rise in tourist footfall in the Himalayan states and its environmental consequences and the challenges of accessing potable water despite the Himalayas being water-abundant, both the nature of development and the roles and capacities of community-led and state institutions deserve greater attention. Elsewhere, decades after the 1962 conflict between India and China and as memories fade, there is a need for preserving and archiving these memories. This panel is a culmination of the year-long research and fieldwork of scholars focusing on these specific subjects and offers both analyses as well as policy suggestions to tackle the challenges highlighted.
